

Please don't take satellite radio's instant weather and traffic away from me! I hate commercials and want uninterrupted music. So, sometimes I need weather and traffic reports. I need these when I need these and until XM started giving me these for my area (Orlando, FL), I usually have to scan around the dial while driving (a situation less than ideal) to try to find the reports. As you can imagine, sometimes by the time I found them (when I found them) it was too late to change my course to avoid wrecks etc. I think that the NAB has a lot of nerve to try to stop progress. That would be like the kerosene dealers trying to pass a law that electricity could only be used in the day time and not at night. Even though I have XM in my car, I still occasionally listen to the radio (both AM & FM) for shows etc. It's all about choice!
